

Video Producer - Job Description

At Three Pillars Media, a video producer is someone who can take a project through filming and editing, either on their own or as a team. Some days you may be the lead on a project while others you will be supporting the team. Concepting videos, storyboarding, script writing, filming, editing, coloring, motion graphics...all of these are parts of that process but more importantly it is how you communicate and work with other team members and clients.

A primary skill set to complement our team is someone who is proficient with graphics and can help take a video to the next level. Graphics, whether simple or complex, are a key piece in our post-production process. The other primary skill set is to be a very technical minded editor. Attention to detail in editing is key, especially when working with product companies like we do. In our process, videos need to first be technically correct before they can be artistic.

- Production planning, including location and talent scouting
- Obviously getting sweet shots using tools such as Sony FX6's, dana dolly, ronin...
- Editing the right story together using Adobe Creative Cloud products

- Attention to detail: multiple rounds of review call for meticulous editing
- Experience...show you know what you're doing

- Self-motivated to not just get work done but to continually raise the creative bar

The right person is someone who currently feels stuck working on the same thing every day or tired of working by themselves. At Three Pillars, you need a servant attitude to lift up those around you to another level. ...who is looking for a great workplace culture with strong values. We've all worked places where the content is repetitive, the morals are lacking, you're asked to put work before your family...

If you like the variety of filming in the corporate boardroom one day and the next wiping manure off your boots, you will love it here.
